Key Map TO THE Sectional Maps OF THE RED ROAD BOOK

The Red Squares show certain sections. Each of these squares is numbered. Corresponding to this number is a large plate with the same number. The large plate shows the details.

The large sectional plates are drawn to a scale of approximately five miles to an inch. They are of sufficient detail, yet not confusing by superfluous detail.

City street maps begin on page 56, and are grouped by states.

The index of towns and their plate location will be found at the back of the RED ROAD BOOK.

See page 5 for the explanation of signs and symbols used to portray recurring features on the sectional maps.

Our aim is simplicity. Too many Automobile Route publications attempt so much that in the effort to be "complete" they become "confusing." Many years of motor travel, and the observations of others, lead us to the opinion that once out of the confusion of a city's streets, on the broad highway, the need is less for the detailed, must-be-closely followed printed word comments and instruction of the path itself, but rather the need is for the accurate knowledge that the road to town A and thence to town B is of automobile goodness, and that it proceeds via this and that village; this or that side of the lake or mountain, with crossing railroad or paralleling trolley line as a check on location. Thus is one free to carry out their original purpose — to see the country — with this instruction book.

We believe in Road Maps for the use of the tourist. Such show all necessary information of the route, as well as the surrounding country near and through which they pass. If, as with a map, one sees that they are to pass within a few miles of a well known and picturesque lake, or a historic hamlet, or, by the passing fancy, seek to go "across country," the Road Map is the best aid for this free lance mode of travel.

Then, too, many a tourist, though with a definite objective, may elect to take such roads as are less frequented by the rapid, dust-whirling motorists who use the much advertised highroads, and to such, the general Road Map is indispensable.

The science of man knows no better way of portraying the geography of a state or section than by the map.

EXPLANATION

An intelligent use of the RED ROAD BOOK requires familiarity with the "signs," as printed below. Sectional plates run from west to east, tier over tier, starting with New York City. The figures outside the corners of each plate give the numbers of contiguous plates.

Street maps of all principal cities and larger towns are constructed with the viewpoint of simplicity and directness. Side and unimportant streets are eliminated. The main and named streets only are shown. If a trolley runs on a street, the combination is given in accordance with the sign table below. Adjacent or abutting the main streets thus shown, are located fixed buildings and conspicuous landmarks, which will enable the autoist to check up the correctness of his travel through the city.

An index of cities and towns, with a reference as to the sectional plate on which they may be found, is given in the RED ROAD BOOK.

The RED ROAD BOOK is compiled from United States Government Surveys, official local surveys, and, also, from original sources. We render our hearty thanks for all assistance given the publishers of the RED ROAD BOOK, by city engineers and others who have contributed their advice and local information in the make-up of the various parts of the RED ROAD BOOK.

How to identify a road which runs from one plate over to another

On each plate border are letters (top and bottom) and numbers (at the sides). These designate main roads which run over onto the adjacent plate.

On the adjacent plate a similar number or letter is shown so as to identify by like letter and like numeral the continuation of the original road.

Detailed Maps of the White Mountains Section

Tourists who are interested in the White Mountains section will find the detailed plates, which follow, of unusual interest. By means of them the mountains may be identified by name and by elevation. While all touring roads are shown, there is added a special feature, — that of the foot-trails over which to climb the peaks, as well as the Rest and Safety Camps made for public use by the Appalachian Mountain Club, and marked "C".

CITY MAPS

The city maps shown in the RED ROAD BOOK are distinct and unique in plan. By the absolute elimination of all secondary and unimportant (to the autoist) streets, we show the direct thoroughfares upon which one enters the city, through which one proceeds to make their proper exit. Here and there along the streets are certain landmarks of such distinctive character as are readily identified from the map, thus serving to "check up" one's location. On departing from the city, one learns from the city maps, the mileage to the principal points toward which the streets start them.

The symbols below are readily kept in mind and serve to show the position of the city landmarks.

ROAD MILEAGE TABLE

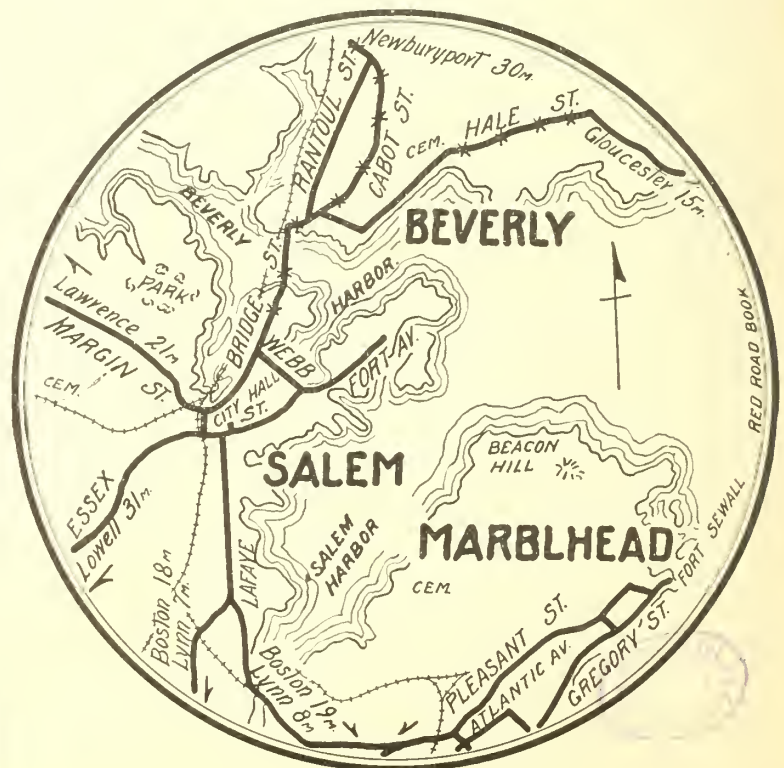

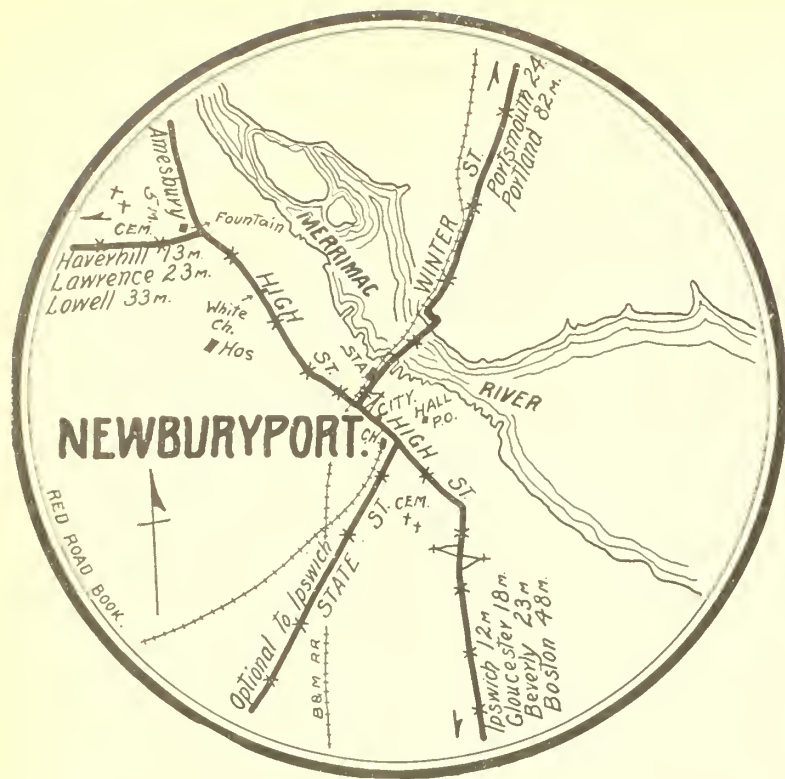

To find the road mileage between Boston and Worcester:

Locate Worcester in the side vertical column of places. Thence run to the right through numbers on the same line until you are UNDER the word Boston (placed in the top horizontal column). This is ten numbers over; this intersection shows 44, which is the road mileage between the two places.

To find the road mileage between Springfield and Bretton Woods:

Locate Springfield on the side vertical column. Thence run to the right until UNDER Bretton Woods (placed at the top horizontal column), which is 24 numbers to the right from Springfield. The intersection shows 210, which is the road mileage.

NOTE: Obviously, distances may be computed by different routes, therefore with different figures as results. We have used the best roads between places, neither short cuts over roads of dubious character, nor roundabout roads, to favor some particular Hotel.
